In chess, the "touch-move" rule states that if a player (whose turn it is to move) touches one of his pieces, it must be moved if it has a legal move.

In one famous instance, in Linares 1994, former World Champion Garry Kasparov changed his move after momentarily letting go of a piece. Kasparov went on to win the game. The tournament officials had videotape proving that his hand left the piece, but refused to release the video evidence. A factor counting against his opponent in the game was that a whole day passed before a complaint was issued, and such claims must be made during the game. The videotape revealed that Kasparov did let go of the piece for one quarter second. Name Kasparov's opponent in the game
